Uchiko at a glance

The charming and traditional town of Uchiko is located in the centre of Ehime Prefecture, about 40 km southwest of the prefectural capital, Matsuyama City. The town covers an area of 299.5 km<sup>2</sup>, and the Oda River, a tributary of the Hijikawa River, flows through the entire area. Although only a small area is flat, and approximately 77% is forest, the area is blessed with fertile soil and a warm, humid climate. In particular, the cultivation of agricultural products such as persimmons, chestnuts, grapes, pears, peaches and shiitake mushrooms is widespread and thriving. Uchiko is also surrounded by many mountains and nature, including the Odamiyama Valley, a national forest.

In 2005, Uchiko Town merged with Ikazaki Town and Oda Town, and the current population is approximately 14,000.

During Japan's period of rapid economic growth from 1954 to 1973, buildings spread across the country, and concrete buildings became the norm. Despite this, Uchiko Town maintains cultural heritage, traditional techniques, and old-fashioned lifestyles at a high level.

Uchiko Town is working to maintain the Preservation District for Groups of Traditional Buildings, which was built from the Edo period(1603-1867) to the Taishō period(1912-1926) and has a unique Japanese landscape and character.

In 1986, Uchiko Town held a symposium to learn about the movement to preserve traditional townscapes, and invited the mayor of Rothenburg ob der Tauber in Germany, to give a lecture. This led to the start of youth exchange, and in 2011 the two cities signed a sister city agreement. At the Karari Roadside Station, visitors can enjoy the taste of authentic Bavarian sausages made by a sausage maker trained in Rothenburg.

Japanese tourists who visit Uchiko from the noisy cities find a glimpse of old Japan, and feel a certain nostalgia.

We hope you will explore the town centre, farming villages and mountainous areas of Uchiko with us.

Now is the time to discover the history of Japan.

Historic District Preservation Area (Yōkaichi & Gokoku Area)

From the Edo period (1603-1867) to the Meiji period (1868-1912), the Yōkaichi & Gokoku area prospered as a center for the production of Japanese wax. Today, the Yōkaichi & Gokoku area is lined with houses painted with plaster that give a sense of the atmosphere of the time. In the early 1970s, a movement to protect the historical district of Uchiko began, and in 1982, Uchiko was selected as the first Important Preservation District for Groups of Traditional Buildings in Shikoku. Today, there are more than 120 nationally designated Preservation Districts in Japan, but what makes Uchiko different from the others is that the residents actually live in the traditional houses, and you can feel the breath of life in the townscape. In order to restore traditional houses and preserve the appearance of the townscape, various regulations have been established in the area, and permission from the government is required for repairs and renovations. In addition, compared to modern construction methods, the cost of restoring the buildings using traditional materials and methods is high, the residents carry out the repairs while making use of national and local government subsidies. With the cooperation of the local residents, preservation efforts have been underway in this area for over 40 years in collaboration with the local government. As the local people play a major role in this movement, the preservation of the historical district is strongly linked to the protection of history and local culture. Thanks to the cooperation and understanding of the local people, the historic townscape of Uchiko has retained its dated appearance to this day.

Japanese Wax Museum & Kamihaga Residence (National Important Cultural Asset)

The Kamihaga Residence was once the mansion of a wealthy merchant who belonged to the Haga family which made their fortune producing Japanese wax. It is a traditional Japanese house, and the kamaba (kettle room) that was once used as a workplace and tatami rooms give a glimpse of the life that was once lived here. The museum displays information on the wax manufacturing process and a huge amount of information related to wax production.

Honhaga Residence (National Important Cultural Asset)

This mansion was built during the peak of Uchiko's wax production, and was the main residence of the Haga family, a wealthy merchant family that made its fortune from the production of Japanese wax. The gorgeous decorations, such as the artistic plasterwork and ridge-end tiles, are more prestigious and precious than those of other buildings. Only the garden and the exterior of the building are open to visitors.

Uchiko-za Theatre (currently closed for repairs; you can visit the Uchiko-za dressing room)(National Important Cultural Asset)

Uchiko-za is a wooden theatre that was built in 1916 with funds raised by the townspeople. At the time, Uchiko-za was the main entertainment venue in the town, where kabuki (classical Japanese theatre) and bunraku (puppet theatre) were performed, but as time went on, the number of performances gradually decreased, and the building was in danger of being torn down due to deterioration. In order to preserve this historically valuable theatre, the Uchiko-za was restored in 1985 and transformed once again into a theatre. Uchiko-za is a base for cultural arts and local event still to this day.

* The theatre will be closed for about four years from September 2024 for large-scale repair work, but you can still visit the dressing room behind Uchiko-za. You can see the renovation work being carried out on the Uchiko-za theatre up close, and you can also see exhibits and photos of past performances at the Uchiko-za. You can also buy original Uchiko-za goods.

The only Japanese candle shop in Ehime that has been in business for 200 years since the Edo period.

Ōmori Japanese Candle Maker

It is the only handmade Japanese candle store in the prefecture. Japanese candles are made from the fruit of the Japanese wax tree, rather than petroleum, and are made using a unique method that involves layering the wax, so that the cut surface looks like tree rings. Uchiko Japanese candles are completely unpainted and uncolored, and they are characterized by their large, bright, warm flame and the wax does not drip easily. These are traditional goods that can only be purchased here.
